

Artist Residency Program

GUIDELINES

North Vancouver Recreation & Culture is committed to the arts as an essential element in a vital, creative and healthy community, strives to facilitate participation in and access to the arts for all, and seeks to build communities by making art together.

Program Description

The Artist Residency Program (ARP) provides a range of opportunities for artists to work in the community, to develop a wide range of arts-based projects and activities with various publics and to deliver creative projects that generate meaningful connections for participants as well as for the broader community.

The NVRC Artist Residency Program sees artists work collaboratively with community members (who may or may not see themselves as artists or as artistically creative) in initiatives where the participants take a central role as creators, producers and performers or as active audiences for the project. Contributing to the growing vibrancy of our neighbourhoods, the ARP seeks to inspire participation and relationship-building where art (the process of creating together) acts as a catalyst for individual and community engagement. Key principles of the program include:

(1) supporting the exploration of creativity;

The Artist Residency Program provides access to creation space, covers material costs and offers funding options to artists.

(2) building community by making art together; AND

Community-engaged arts practices are cooperative and participatory; they focus on shared exploration, creation and relationship-building rather than on the transmission of technical skills from teacher to student.

(3) ensuring that participation in the arts is accessible to all.

Participation in community-cultural development projects is open to all, regardless of age, sex, ability or economic status. Programs are designed to be welcoming to and to encourage the participation of those publics that have traditionally been underserved or that are marginalized within our communities.

• Program Structure

The NVRC Artist Residency Program does not offer a live-in residency. It is open only to artists who live or work in North Vancouver, on the North Shore or in Metro Vancouver, BC, Canada. The NVRC Artist Residency Program offers three program streams:

(1) Creation Labs

Creation Lab residencies offer studio time to artists to experiment with new ideas, to play with and create new directions in their practice, to develop new “work” and to present it in a workshop setting.

Creation Labs are mostly self-directed, intensive and of relatively short duration (six weeks to four months); they are expected to culminate in some kind of public activity, demonstration, open house, showcase or workshop.

Creation Labs are open to solo artists, small artist collectives or to groups of two or more artists (artist groups) working in collaboration. Collaborations are encouraged between artists:

- of different social, cultural and economic backgrounds
- of diverse ethnic and religious backgrounds
- of different sex and gender orientations
- working in different artistic areas, media and traditions AND
- with different creative practices or working in different traditions

The NVRC cannot offer exclusive use of a single studio space. However, we do offer free use of any rooms or spaces that are available and that can be scheduled at one or more of the Recreation & Cultural facilities in North Vancouver. Partner organizations may also have available space to offer.

Artist Fees are available to support the creative process.

(2) Creating Connections

Creating Connections residencies offer a framework for professional artists to work directly with members of the community. The Creating Connections program is open to solo artists or small artist collectives. Residencies are concentrated in a term of two to four months.

Creating Connections residencies are typically built around a dedicated, pre-determined area of focus or theme with a goal to encourage the development of a wide variety of interactions between artists and community members. Projects are highly participatory, encourage acts of shared creation and support life-long learning.

Activities may consist of any mix of (community) discussions, (creative) workshops, drop-in sessions, or pop-up experiences. Projects may be intentionally planned to connect with, to animate and to promote existing programming, events and activities by:

- providing opportunities for creative and cultural exchange
- activating outdoor public space(s) and other non-traditional places
- delivering fun, inviting and accessible engagement in artistic and creative activities
- including people – including those who do not see themselves as artists – as creators, producers, performers and active audiences
- bringing the community together AND
- fostering creative conversation and participation in issues identified as important by the community

NVRC offers the free use of space (or spaces) required to deliver the project as well as staff support where connecting with existing NVRC programs is required. Artist Fees are provided and budget is available for project materials.

(3) Community Residency

Based at the John Braithwaite Community Centre (JBCC), the Community Residency offers free use of space where artist(s) can take up an in-house residency.

The Community Residency Program is a longer-term opportunity; residencies are expected to last six to nine months. Space at JBCC will be made available during the Centre's opening hours and will act as a home base and small office/studio. Resident artist(s) will be expected to spend their time "in residence," establishing a presence at JBCC and in the surrounding neighbourhood, interacting with and engaging the public in a range of creative practices. The goal of the program is to invite community members and curious visitors to share in creating activities that are collaborative, cooperative and community-building.

During the residency artist(s) will develop projects, connect with members of the public and engage them in the collaborative creation of art projects. Connecting with the public can take many forms:

- participating in already scheduled programming
- having a presence at events and festivals
- leading interactive demonstrations
- offering open "studio hours"
- conducting community art workshops
- developing community art projects OR
- activating the spaces in and around JBCC

Artist Fees will be subject to the length of the residency. Budget is available to cover project materials.

• Guiding Principles

The NVRC Artist Residency Program is based on shared principles of community-engaged arts practice and community cultural development. Its purpose is to contribute to the health of the community by connecting artists and community members in a creative process that mutually engages all parties in issues of shared interest.

Community-Engaged Arts (CEA)

There is no single, right way to make community-engaged art. In practical terms, however, a considerable number of successful projects fall into two broad categories:

- Cooperative Co-Creation: the Artist creates a framework that enables participants to contribute from their own experience, and to work together with the Artist in a process of collaborative co-creation.
- Scripted Encounters: the Artist creates a partially pre-scripted, often performance-based project, participation in which brings community members to new and fresh understandings of their creative self.

In each case, an artist or artists lead(s) a project where the participation, experience and skills of community members are an integral part of the creative process.

Community Cultural Development (CCD)

The key goals of community cultural development are:

- to support artists working in community contexts
- to encourage the development of a wide variety of interactions between artists and community members
- to provide a framework for creative collaboration between artists and communities
- to encourage and support artistic projects which leave a physical and/or social legacy in the community
- to make our communities more vibrant
- to inspire participation and relationship-building
- to engage communities and people – even those who don't see themselves as artists – as creators, producers, performers, and active audiences

How to Apply

The NVRC issues an Open Call to Artists working in all disciplines, including but not limited to: choreographers, composers, dance artists, digital media artists, graphic artists, multi-media and multi-disciplinary artists, musicians, performance artists, poets, spoken-word artists, theatre artists, video artists and writers. The Call is open only to artists who live or work in North Vancouver, on the North Shore or in Metro Vancouver, BC, Canada.

Interested artists, artist teams, collectives or other creative parties will submit a completed Application to the Artist Residency Program, indicating which of the program streams they are interested in participating in. Applicants may submit proposals to more than one program stream. Application materials will be published on the NVRC website at:

<https://www.nvrc.ca/arts-culture/artist-residency-program>

A Selection Panel, consisting of staff and qualified volunteers from the Public Art Advisory Committee and/or the Arts & Culture Grants Committee, will review and shortlist applications.

Shortlisted Applicants will be invited to interview and to present a brief proposal, outlining their qualifications, experience and vision for the project. Once a resident artist or artists has been selected, he/she/they will enter into a contractual agreement with the North Vancouver Recreation & Culture Commission.

• Information Sessions

Staff will advertise and conduct a short series of Information Sessions at various locations around North Vancouver. Potential applicants will be encouraged to attend an Information Session before applying to the NVRV Artist Residency Program

• Selection Process

The Selection Process consists of two stages:

1. Initial Review / Shortlisting

A Selection Panel reviews each application and creates a short list of artists who meet the criteria for the program and whose proposals most directly meet the program goals and objectives. The initial review is based on the following criteria:

- Strength and creativity of past work
- Experience in relevant disciplines
- Inventiveness of approach
- Commitment to working collaboratively with community members, as demonstrated through previous projects
- Connection to issues of identified community interest

2. Applicant Interviews

A Selection Panel interviews each shortlisted applicant and awards residencies to the top-ranked artist(s) or artist team(s). In addition to the above criteria, selection of artists is based on the following:

- Strength and mix of proposed activities
- Demonstration of new, creative and effective ways to meet program goals and objectives

- Proposal can be achieved within a clearly outlined budget
- Connection to and fit with identified opportunities in the community
